Beazley Safeguard Not for profit

The not for profit sector includes a very diverse range of organizations and institutions. Many focus exclusively on the welfare of minors or vulnerable adults, while others will come into contact with them during the course of their work.

As well as staff members, many not for profit entities rely heavily on volunteers to underpin their mission. While some providers, such as libraries and museums, will predominantly offer their services at a fixed location, many others will conduct their activities in a variety of settings e.g. youth clubs and associations, or, in the case of sports and hobby clubs, travel for events and competitions.

Across this spectrum, not for profits are faced with a range of exposures and risk management challenges. It is essential that relevant staff and volunteers are appropriately vetted, monitored and trained on safeguarding issues and procedures.

Where allegations are made, a swift and surefooted response is essential – one that addresses the position of the person making the allegation and their family, as well as the broader constituencies of current and prospective users and beneficiaries of a not for profit's facilities and services, as well as donors, can help mitigate the impact upon them and potential harm. Institutions may also need to deal with law enforcement, regulators, private attorneys, and the community at large.

Allegations will often be disseminated very rapidly by both traditional and social media and many institutions will have little or no experience in dealing with this.

Beazley Safeguard has been designed as a comprehensive insurance, risk management and crisis response program to help not for profit organizations address areas of potential risk, and – if needed – to provide support in dealing with crisis response, communication and management.
